The programmes for the Space Profile for the next decade 1990-2000 are in the process of finalisation. These programmes strongly focus on the operationalisation of the space services on a continuing basis to enable the country to derive full benefits of space technology in the areas of communication, resources survey, meteorology and introduction of specialised services such as search and rescue operations, mobile communication, drought monitoring etc. The progress envisaged include development of both rocket and satellite technology and building up of industrial interfaces. A few advanced R & D elements are also envisaged keeping in view the world scenario as well as the requirements of the country beyond 2000 AD.

The over-all thrust will, thus, be to meet the country's essential requirement for space services. These are under various stages of study and assessment.

(d) It is too early to arrive at an estimate for the Space Profile for the Decade 1990-2000.
